

Prakash Elston is currently employed at Greenwood High School, in addition to serving as an Adjunct Professor for Lander University and Southern Wesleyan University. Ms. Elston was born in San Antonio Texas, but moved to South Carolina with her family at an early age. She grew up in the lowcountry of South Carolina and graduated from Andrews High School. After graduation, she attended both Brenau University and Furman University, graduating with a B.A. in History.

Ms. Elston's first teaching job was in 1994 at Emerald High School in Greenwood, SC. While teaching full time, she attended graduate classes at night and in May of 1998 received her M.Ed.. Soon after, she transferred to Phoenix, AZ where she lived and taught computer and education graduate and undergraduate classes for seven years at the University of Phoenix and Glendale Community college. Elston returned to South Carolina in 2005.