

Tami Miller currently serves as part of the professional staff of Riverside Middle School. Although she is certified to teach K-12 and has experience in elementary, middle grades, secondary, and alternative school settings, she chose to concentrate on United States and South Carolina History at the 8th grade level.

For the last two years, Tami has taken time out of the classroom to join the Human Resources Department at the district level where she has worked in the Mentoring and Evaluation Office of Greenville County Schools. In this position, she has worked with teachers across the district and is always on the lookout for the best practices – particularly in the area of social studies.

Tami is a 2005 Alumna of the Teachers of Government (TOG) Program and has continued to serve the Riley Institute as a research volunteer. As a result of her TOG experience, she applied for the C-SPAN Teacher Fellowship and was selected as one of the top 5 finalists in the nation. Her most recent passion has been the development of an Advisory Board for the Teachers of Government program with the Riley Institute. Realizing the impact that the TOG experience had made on her own professional development, she knew that its impact could reach beyond the two-week experience. She envisioned an Advisory Board that could provide instructional and curriculum support for social studies educators, as well as serving as ambassadors for the Teachers of Government Program.

Beginning in June, Tami will step into her new position as manager of the Carolina First Center for Excellence – part of the Workforce Development and Education of the Greater Greenville Chamber of Commerce - where she will work with the school and corporate communities to implement continuous quality improvement in classrooms.
